FLCN 3000
Advanced Chinese Abroad
Prerequisites: Departmental Approval

Bulletin Description: Course work at the advanced level taken on an approved study program abroad. The student should consult the appropriate undergraduate advisor for an estimation of credit prior to going abroad.

Explanation of Study Abroad Courses: The FL 1000, FL 2000, and FL 3000 designations are used within FLL to award credits to students who study abroad across all languages offered. The credit hours granted are variable (from 1-10) but are based on both course descriptions and/or syllabi as well as contact hours taken by the students at the various host institutions to determine AU equivalencies. Since most institutions have placements to determine which of their courses AU students should be enrolled in, the variable credit and Study Abroad designation provides the students and the institutions with a course that fits the course work. All FLL students have to consult the various language advisors and directors to get approved for these Elementary (1000), Intermediate (2000), and Advanced Abroad study abroad courses. Since these courses are mostly taught by faculty at the partner universities, syllabi vary and are evaluated on a continuous basis to ensure academic integrity and proper credit assignment.

Objectives: Study Abroad is designed to provide students with language and culture studies in an international setting. The specific objectives vary from course to course.
